

Kylling som i Ghana

Hvis du vil lave kylling i jordnøddesuppe, skal du bruge:

- 1 kylling
- 3 løg
- 4-5 tomater
- 3-4 spiseskefulde tomatpuré
- 1 grøn chilipeber
- Et halvt glas jordnøddesmør (peanutbutter)
- 50 gram jordnødder
- 1 1/2 liter vand
- 1 1/2 deciliter ris

- ☐ Kyllingen koges i ca. 30 minutter.
- ☐ Hæld vand ved, og smag til med salt, peber, tomatpuré og chili.

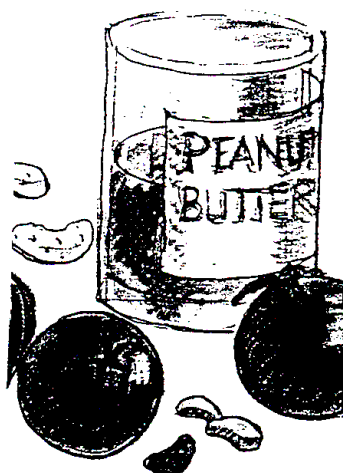

- ☐ Hak jordnødderne og kom dem i jordnøddesmørret. Blandingen skal i gryden. Hæld også ris i gryden.

- ☐ Del kyllingen i 8 stykker.

- ☐ Retten er til 4 personer. Den serveres med ris og brød.

- ☐ Hak løg og tomater, og kom det i en gryde sammen med de 8 stykker kylling.

Recipe for pancakes

You need:

2 dl flour	a little salt
2 eggs	1 spoon of oil
3 dl milk	10 g butter

Mix the flour, eggs, milk and salt.
 Put the mixture in the fridge for half an hour.
 Then add the oil. Melt the butter in a pan.
 Put about $\frac{1}{2}$ dl of the mixture in the pan.
 Heat it until it starts to colour at the edges.
 Then turn it over and heat it on the other side.

Hvilke kriterier bruger vi for at bestemme dette?

She had just gone out of the supermarket when she felt a hand on her shoulder.

"Would you please come with me to the manager's office?" she heard someone say to her.

"Whatever for?" She could not imagine why the manager would like to talk to her.

"I believe you have something in your bag that you didn't pay for," said the woman, obviously a house detective. "We'll just have to make sure."

"Impossible. I wouldn't dream of stealing. It must be a mistake," the woman stammered. She was convinced that it was a mistake. How embarrassing to be stopped like that. Everybody around her had stopped too and stood staring at her. The sooner she could get away from people's eyes, the better.

At the manager's office she was asked to empty her bag. When all the things were spread all over the desk, the manager asked for her receipt.

She took it out of her purse and handed it to him, and one by one he took her shopping aside at the same time crossing out the article on the receipt.

The lipstick! She knew what had happened. That was the thing she hadn't paid for. It was never her intention to steal it. Her shopping-bag was in the trolley and by mistake she had put the lipstick in the bag instead of putting it in the trolley with the other shopings.

"This lipstick," said the manager, "is not on the receipt. Our price tag is still on it. Is this the item you saw the woman take?" he asked the house detective.

"Yes, I saw her put it in her bag, that's why I am so sure that she has stolen it."

"But I haven't stolen it. It's a mistake. I can explain," she said almost crying. She felt her cheeks burning.

"I'll pay for it, of course."

"That's what they all say. Do you know how often it happens? Do you know the size of the loss we suffer every year? It's close to 1 million. One million, madam! And we don't like it."

Since it is the first time we have caught you, we shall only take down your name and address. But if we catch you again, we shall have to inform the police." He sounded angry.

How would she be able to convince him that it was a mistake? She explained what had happened, how she in distraction had put the lipstick in the wrong place, that she would never dream of stealing. Why should she. She had enough money to pay for what she wanted to buy.

"It's no guarantee that you are a nice woman with a good background, a good job and money enough on your hands. You have no idea the number of so-called nice "ladies" we catch every year. But somehow I believe you. I'll write down your name and address anyway. We've got to stick to the rules. Take it as a warning and be more careful in the future.

You can pay me for the lipstick and then I'll let you go. I'm sorry you had to go through this."

A nasty experience
